At the first sign of a hurricane, people hide in basements or leave their homes because hurricanes are so dangerous that they can blow their houses away. However, some people go towards hurricanes at that dangerous moment. They are called hurricane chasers.

A hurricane chaser conducts meteorological research on the field to report tornadoes, storms, hurricanes, and other high-impact weather conditions to weather stations. Generally, hurricane chasers analyze past and current data of the precise locations of hurricanes so that they can forecast when and where particular hurricanes are likely to occur. Relying on such knowledge and experiences, they rush to the possible location and go to the hurricane. They risk their lives, but the information is vital for accurate weather forecasting and warnings.

One of the most famous hurricane chasers is Josh Morgerman. He grew up in Long Island, New York. When he was six years old, Hurricane Belle struck Long Island, causing significant damage in his hometown. From that day on, he became fascinated with hurricanes. These days he stars on the TV show titled 'Hurricane Man' which shows how he chases hurricanes.
